The Committee of the Archaeological Society having expressed a wish that I should prepare drawings and descriptions of the Norwich Merchant Marks for publication in their Journal, I have had great pleasure in searching every source of information that came within my reach. In 1825 Mr. Woodward wrote a Paper on this subject, which was read to the Society of Antiquaries, accompanied by very accurate drawings; and in 1827 he thought of publishing an account of such as he had been able to collect, to the number of seventy; most of which may now be seen in various parts of the city. This able and lamented antiquary did not, however, carry out his intention; but I have had the advantage of consulting his Manuscripts, now in the possession of Hudson Gurney, Esq., to whose kindness I am likewise indebted for a sight of a Manuscript History of Norwich, written by Benjamin Mackerell in 1737, in which he has noticed the Marks remaining i...
